

Anil Ambani's youngest son joins Reliance Group

OUR BUREAU

Mumbai, January 20

Anshul Ambani, the youngest son of Reliance Group Chairman Anil Ambani, has joined the group as a management trainee, following the completion of his education.

The 23-year-old joined group company Reliance Infrastructure as a management trainee earlier last week.

"Excited to have my brother @AmbaniAnshul back from university, and joining us at the group. Time to kick it," Anmol Ambani, Anil Ambani's elder son, tweeted last week.

Anshul had graduated in December 2018 from Stern School of Business, New York University, with a Bachelor's Degree in Business Management, an RInfra note said.

Prior to that, he was at American School, and graduated in 2014 completing his International Baccalaureate

Anshul Ambani

(IB) programme. RInfra is into developing projects through various Special Purpose Vehicles across sectors such as power, roads and metro rail and Defence.

The company is also into providing engineering and construction services for developing power, infrastructure, metro and road projects.

Sibling Anmol Ambani had joined Reliance Mutual Fund as a trainee in 2014 and was later inducted into Reliance Capital's board in 2016. He currently oversees the group's financial services business.